VINDICATION

OF THE

ON

CONVOCATION

AND THE

Lord Chancellor

OF

IRELAND,

In Answer to the ENGLISHMAN'S

DEFENCE of the 6-1.

INA

LETTER to Mr. STEEL, with a POSTSCRIPT to the Author of the FLTING-POST,
No. 3442.

By the Editor of ARISTIDES. m". Delenny

DUBLIN, Printed by Daniel Tompfon, 1714

MOITADIOMIV

OF THE

COMPOCATION

AND THE

vd vd

bq

Ca

in th

ti

I ord Chandellor

In Answer to the HAGLISHMANS

AMI

LEITER to Mr. STEEL, with a FOSTICEITS to the Author of the FLYING POST,
No. 3442.

By the Editor of ARISTIDES.

PUBLIM Printed by Daniel Tompfor, rother

GONIVOCATIO

AND THE

LORD CHANCELLOR, &cc.

London, Feb. 2. 1713-

Dear DICK,

Read thy late Letter, as I imagin'd, to thy felf, but when I observed thy exquisite Conceit of an English-Man, born in Dublin, I began to think it was to me; for as much, as by Virtue of that Turn, I came to have as good a Title to it as any Man in Christendom, and therefore, in good Manners, thought my felf oblig'd to return thee the following Answer; I mean to that Part of it, where thou takest upon thee to vindicate the Commons of Ireland from the late ill Uffage of the Examiner:

Pic

fro

in

th

24 at br

th

th

A

to

DO

OI

R(

C

OI

W

25 aı

2

For as to that Part, containing thy Curious Speculations upon the Point of a Pyramid's being above it's Base, and the Base below it; I shall not presume to say one Syllable, but pass directly to the first Answer to the first Paragraph thou hast noticed in the Examiner, which is this.

Thousand Wiles and Stratagems, by the most subtile Abuses of Liberty, by Fears and Jealousies, Lying and Calumny, by the most Arbitrary Strains of usurp'd Power, and by Rage and Violence, unequal to the Capacities of a single Tyrant, the Irish Whigs have gotten the better of the Lenity and Indolence of the Government, and have forc'd their Way into One Branch of the Legislature.

To which then answerest so fully so convincingly and with a Penetration peculiar to thy selt. 'Thus' Assertion is an High Grime and Misdemeanour. And I reply, (without Vanity) as fully and as convincingly every Whit. 'Friend Richard, it may be a High Grime and Misdemeanour; but depend upon it, it's TRUTH. But then say you, 'Tu a New Repreach to all Men in Power, if they let this also go unpunish'd. Truly, Dick, Is letting High Crimes and Misdemeanours go unpunish'd, be a Repreach upon the Men in Power, I may say, Thou hast brought more Repreaches upon them than any Man in Great-Britain. I don't Question, if I were put to't, but I cou'd pick ng

all

tly

OU

the ars

by

p'd

111-

LY-

the

of

eir

Da-

gly

bis

ur.

25

but

ou,

if et-

pu-

er, hes I

u'd

ick

pick out some Thousands of Proofs for this Truth, from the Writings of a certain Englishman, born in Dublin: Nay, they tell me, Dick, That thou thy felf keepest an Office for that very Purpose: zamely, to vend Abuses against the Men in Power at least Three Times a Week, that so thou may st bring bitter Reproaches upon them for letting thee go unpunish'd; and I affure thee, my Friend, this is the only Way that thou, with the united Affiltance of thy whole Tribe, wilt ever be able to bring any just Reproaches upon these Men, Thou goeft on with fuch furprizing Truths, fuch noble and useful Discoveries, as cannot fail at once to Amaze and Inform...... It concerns none but the Members of that House, to make Sir Constantine Phipps appear a guilty Man; indeed it may be so ; tho by the Manner of their Proceedings, one woud be strongly tempted to think otherwife. I am fure, by the Discoveries they have made, it should seem, as if his best Friends were as much concern'd in that Acculation, as his worst and wifest Enemies, the C-s.

But then, you insift upon it, That the House of "C-ns are his proper Accusers: Who ever deny'd it, Dick? tis so evident that they are, that no Body else ever did, or I dare say, ever will attempt that Province; and if they shoud, tis Ten to One, if they woud not incurr the Guilt of High Crimes and Mildemeanours.

In the next Place thou comest slily on with thy Prophecies, post fastum -- Nay, nay, Dick, that's intolerable! take that and take all I trom! thou knowest (fly Dog!) full well, that the P--nt of Ireland had been prorogu'd at least a Fortnight before the Penning of that Letters and yet after that, thoud it have the Impudence to palm thy Prognosticks upon us, and come up with thy if s and and's, forfooth: " If their Pro-" ceedings therein are any Way interrupted, af ter the Examiner has been bis Advocate..... What then? Why then, "it will be a strong " Argument on the Side of the C-ns. Now 1 think not; I should be of Opinion, that it would rather be a strong Argument against em. I'm fure 'tis an Argument, at least, that Her Majelty thinks em in the Wrong; for otherwise it can never be prefum'd; that She woud interrupt the Execution of Justice, or postpone the Complaints of an injur'd Nation: But still, perhaps, you'l inlift upon it, 'That it is a strong Argument on the Side of the C-ns. A strong Argument, How? or, of what? Why truly, Nothing at all-I'm fure, if you had known, you had told us: 'Tu a je ne scay quoy, Dick, 'tis a Sample of that masterly Turn in the Compositions of you easy Writers, when you would delign fomething without being at the Labour of becoming intelligible; i.e. when fomething is intended, but nothing meant or understood.

Then; ' as far the Clergy's Opinion of his Lorda flip in his Administration of Givil Justice, it is no Absolution: O Rare RICHARD! but art thou fure of that? very fure! why then I'll tell thee another Truth, that I am as fure of, as thou art of that ; and that is, That ' asfor the G - s Opinion and Accusation of his Lordship's Administration;

it is no CONDEMNATION.

But the Opinion of the Clergy be no Ab-

Ž,

1

F

0 fe

ti

ai

B

bo

41

40

47

$i yel

folution, yet, their Interposition in it, makes more for the Justification of what Mr. M. s. the faid of themselves, than Resutation of what the House of G-ns said of the Lord Chanceller.

Say'st thou so, Dick? why then I find, thou and I are born to differ and dispute.

.

8

d

n

X

111 is 1

OID

it.

ille

SI

124 afz

the gi-

mg'

YA

rda

15 art

hee

art

MOTE

1012

Alza

olu-

Dost thou think, that the Interposition of the Clergy in Behalf of the Chancellor, whether he were Guilty or Innocent (for that Question is not yet decided, unless perhaps against thee, by a certain Answer and a certain Representation from very good and proper Judges) I say, Doest thou verily believe that fuch an Interpolition does immediately denominate and demonstrate them to be the Troublers and Disturbers of the World? ...I'll put thee a Case, Dick, Suppose it should enter into the Heads of some Worthy and Honourable Men in a certain Island, Otopia, for example, To refolve that a certain Man in that Idend, is not in reality one Man, but rather five and thirty Men; and being that Monster, is of Confequence an Enemy to their Sovereign's faithful Subjects, and therefore should humbly Petition that Sovereign to knock that Monster's Brains out, in Mercy to those poor Subjects. yerygood! w. why then suppose those Subjects, who are properly and truly call'd faithful, shoud meet in a Body, & humbly represent to their Sovereign, That they had each of them Two good Eyes, and Ten Fingers, and that with bumble Submission, they knew how to sount Five and thirty, as well as other Men; and that accordingly they had counted, and counted, till they bad almost counted themselves blind, and yet for their Hearts Blood and Gutts, they con & 1.11 * A. .)

not find, that that same certain Man, was any mere than one, fingle, uncompounded, Individual, and nothing at all like that Monster he was reprefented; and as for his being an Inemy to your taithful Subjects ((ay they) Good your Majesty never selieve one Word of it; your Majesty knows. we ere faithful Subjects; and if we may be allow'd to know our own Friends, and our own E-Bemies; he is One of the best Friends we ever faw our Lives; and therefore, as your Majesty pi-Bies your poor faithful Subjects, spare him for our Sakes .-- What dost think, Dick? would it be just in that Case, to call them Troublers and Difurbers of the World, for telling the Truth ? Hah? No. no, Dick, ne'er fay it, I tell thee, If thou doft, all Mankind will hoot thee for a Codhead and a Sott..... Why at this Rate, thoul't never more be deem'd worthy so much as of Writing a dull abufive Englishman.

It is (as you wisely observe) ' The Glory of the · Churches of England and Ireland, that we of • the Laity are left at Liberty to judge for our · seives, and search the Seriptures for our Duty. But then, Dick, pray, is it equal, that we should be allow'd all this Liberty in Religious Affairs, and they none at all in Civil? How would we take it, to have the Absurdities of Transubstantiation ramm'd down our Throats, upon the Pain of Excommunication and Purgatory? And is't not ss hard, Dick, that the Clergy should be oblig'd to faut both their Eyes and deny their Seven Senses and not dare to distinguish between Black and White; Chalk and Cheefe; 35 and & Unit; a Packindle and a Pikestaff; and twenty other fur for Hi tell Le the Co Sul nor ott

Ma der tho ing

ton.

Don Nat tha dep

nex

Fi. ca be afte

c th

ha D

brec

other Things of as great Consequence, without running the Risque of being taken into Custody for Breach of Priviledge, and voted guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanours? I can tell thee further, That it is the Opinion of a Learned Lawyer of my Acquaintance, that by the Magna Charta, and other antient Branches of the Constitution, 'tis the undoubted Right of every free Subject, of the Crown of England, of what Denomination soever, that shaves his Beard, and buttons his Doublet before, absolutely to distinguish betwixt his Right Hand and his Left; and if any Man threatnes to cut his Throat, to cry out, Murder, Murder, or swear the Peace against him: Nay, thou ownest thy felf, That the Right of Petitioning, is the Right of every Subject in Her Majesty's Dominions; canst thou then call an Act of this Nature in the Clergy, aiming at more Authority than they really have, or rather woud'st thou deprive them of a Right they hold in Common with the meanest of Her Majesty's Subjects?

The Two next Affertions that have any Connexion with one another are Remarkable enough.

8-ur

er

De il-

3-

10 i-

Kr.

De

1-

19 u ıd

er

g

be

of

ir y.

d

S,

C

1n

3C d

1 n d

y

r

First you say, That 'all the Clergymen in the World cannot make out the Words of Mr. Molesworth to be against the Christian Religion. And soon after you tell us, That ' had their Complaint been, that Mr. Molesworth had turn'd them to ridicule, by an Application of Words in Scripture, ' they might have expected in a publick Manner to have the Words retracted.

Dear Sir, 'Tis Ten thousand Pities you were not bred up at the Bar, you have certainly the hap-B pio:

picit Turn for an Advocate, of any Man in Great-Britain; you have defended your Friend by a most strentious Affertion, where the Clergy never attack'd him; and you have left him wholly exposed wherever they do; but I dare say, 'twas none of your Fault, 'twas only because you coud not help it: Dear Sir, be fo kind, as to tell me what Body of Clergy it is, that has charged those Words of Mr. Molesworth, to be against the Christian Religion; I'm fure 'tis not the Clergy of Ireland: Thave read their Complaint to the Upper House, and the Lords Message upon it to the Commons, over and over again; and if I were to have the whole World for it, I cannot find one Tittle of that Imputation in either; I have examin'd every Coffee-house; I have enquir'd of all my Acquaintance, I have read the Flying-Post; I have —but all to no Purpose; I never yet coud meet with any Man, or Thing, that knew one Word of the Matter more than my felf: So that good Sir! unless you will be fo tender Hearted as to resolve me; in all Probability, I shall go down to my Grave uninform'd in this Important Point.

But when I confider'd, that some certain Gentlemen of your Acquaintance (to whom I shall by and by, beg to be remember'd) had desir'd to turn to the 17th of the Ats, where we shoud see the Original Occasion of the Words; and a Rejerence in the Margin, to another Text in the sore-gaing Chapter, wherein the Disturbers of the City are pointed at; and then told us, That these were the Persons principaly aim'd at by Mr. Molesworth in that apt Quotation. I sound in

8

il

n

i

0

6

I

V

0 d

t

I

0

d

1

d

21

t

21

t

1

t

a little Time, that there was really somewhat more Ground for fuch a Charge, than I at first imagin'd; for I no fooner turn d to the aforemention d Chapter and Quotation; but I faw as clear as the Light, that those Words were in Truth spoken directly against the Doctrine of Christianity: which some lend Fellows of the baser Sort, charg'd with many Innovations, and in Confequence of them, with turning the World upfide down, and when I came to look, who do you think these same Diffurbers of the City should be, but Paul and Silas! and how do you think they diffurbed it? Why, truly, by teaching the Christian Religion: From whence I very fairly concluded, That the Troubling of the City, and the Turning the World upfide down, was charg'd immediately upon the Apofiles; but mediately and ultimately upon the Doctrine of Christianity; because the Apostles disturbed the World no otherwise than by reaching and preaching that Doctrine. When I had gotten thus far, you can't imagine how I was transported; What! (thought I) am I then in the Opinion of the great STEEL, or rather of the venerable Nestor Ironside, a better Logician, than all the Clergymen in the World! Go thy Ways honest Phil. lay up thy Stock of Fame, treasure thy Glory in a strong Box, and live comfortably upon it for the Remainder of thy Life.

As to the next Assertion, introduced by these Words, 'Had their Complaint been, That Mr. Molesworth had turn'd them to redicule, Established Complaint indeed, was not litterally That;

B 2

but

eatby a ever extwas roud

the to n it

ged

; I ing, han

l be Pronin-

hall ir'd

Re-

Ci-

hese Mr.

l in

but yet, 'twas not very unlike it: For they fay, They look upon those Words, as design'd to cast an Odium and Aspersion on the whole Glergy, and to represent them as a turbulent and seditions Body: And, indeed Sir, if ever you defign to speak the Truth, tis certain, you can never find a better Opportunity of doing it, than by freely and fully consenting to his Complaint. However, to please you; by casting an Aspersion; shall be meant, no more, at this Time, than turning them to ridicule; that is, representing them, as a Company of Turbulent Seditious Fellows, that turn'd the World upfide down; pray Sir, after they are once become thus Despicable and Ridiculous, how long will they cease to be Odious? Those whose Follies injure themselves, are often from the ill Nature of the World, the Objects of our Ridirule; but when once they come to injure others (at least when they reach our felves in any great Degree) they never fail to be the Objects of our Hatred.

But, (fay you) If they will pronounce a ludicrous Thing, a blasphemous One—Again! certainly, Dick, thou hast an evil Design upon my Life, I have read that same Complaint, and run that same Round over again, till I am ready to faint; and if I can either find, or hear, of one Word of Blasphemy in it, may I be Author of the next Englishman, and hangd for being so. They do say, indeed, That they look upon those Words; as utter'd by Mr. Molesworth, to be an intolerable Prophanation of the Holy Scriptures: And indeed, according to my poor Notion of Prophanation, they certainly are, even from thy own Words

W. Sci I n

aga De 1ik he hac OW Bu Do Ha her tou t'o the Ga up and (fa Ha the Ril baa

Fried, Spok defe

bar

aga jper Words; for if ridiculing in the Phrase of the Scriptures, be not to prophane those Scriptures,

I must confess I know not what is.

12

to

1:

1e

er

ly

0

i-

ly

be

ce

w fe

ill i-

TS

at

ur

11-

n!

ay

111 to ne

ot

10.

nje

an

5:

0-yn ds

When, therefore, I read the Charge brought against Mr. Molesworth by the Clergy, and thy Defence, I cannot but conceit thee, somewhat like an arch Wagg, I once observed in Moor-fields; he comes up to a Northamptonshire Bumpkin, that had a great Quarrel with one of the Wagg's own Acquaintance; Hark'y Friend. fays he to the Bumpkin, I'll stand by thee; never fear: You Dog, fays he to his Companion, I'll hold you Half a Crown, that I defend my Friend's Head here, against you; and that you don't so much as touch one Hair of it, once in twice; done, fays t'other, down with the Money: Immediately they deposited into the Hands of another of their Gang, and to Work they went; the Rogue held up his Stick very stifly over his Friend's Crown, and bid him, Fear nothing; my Life for yours (fays he) he does not come within a Foot of thy Hat. At the fame Time, his Companion lends the poor Fellow a curfed Wipe over the short Ribbs. I told you fo, (fays the Rogue;) if he bad been Striking till Doom's Day, , he would not have touch'd a Hair of your Head.

Honest Richard, e'en so hast thou serv'd thy Friend Molesworth: Thou hast strenuously asserted, That those Words are not Blasphemous, nor spoken against the Christian Religion; there thou desendest him from Two Charges, which the Clergy (that ever I heard of) have not yet brought against him; but as to the true Charge of Aipersing the Body of the Clergy, and prophaning the

1

t

je

h

9 th

th

12

Q

at

th

all

Tu

an

W'e

gi

the Holy Scriptures, there thou hast left him entirely expos'd: Thou hast guarded his Head; but thou hast suffer'd him to receive one or two cursed Wipes upon the short Ribbs, that have made his Heart ake.

Nor hast thou been much kinder to the C-ns, than to thy Friend, for thou defendest their Conduct against the Examiner, with such thin thredbare Sophistry, as any One may see through, with half an Eve.

The C—ns, who had a Right to impeach the Lord Chancellor, went into gentler Methods, and Petition'd, That he might be recall'd, for the Peace of the Subjects of Ireland.

They had a Right, you fay, to Impeach, and pray, why did they not exert it? they are not ordinarily fo little tenacious of their Rights; at least, 'tis not generally thought that they are. Why - they went into gentler Methods: How gentler? Dost mean, with Regard to the Lord Chancellor, or, with Regard to themfelves? Did they think, removing him from his Employ, a gentler Punishment than they could procure him by Impeachment? Never believe it, Dick; for they hate him, as they hate Poison or Obedience: If they had their Will of him, they would burn out both his Eyes, tear out his Liver, and eat his Heart. No, no! the Gentleness thou They would aimd'it at, must regard themselves. not be at the Pains, to make him appear Guilty; they knew it was a hard Task; and would make their Hearts ake, before they coud go through with it; they knew it was much easier to Petition him Guilty, than to prove him fo; and theretherefore they went into gentler Methods.

As to the Truth that follows, I fcorn to be behind Hand with thee, and therefore Ill give thee another for it, The Right of rejecting Petitions, when they are Frivolous and Vexatious, and the Allegations in them contain'd, are False and Scandalous and Malicious, is as much the Right of the Sovereign of England, as the Right of preferring them, is the Right of every Subject in Her Majesty's Dominions.

Dick, There are many other Fooleries and False-hoods in thy LETTER; but at present I am quite weary of thee and it.

PHILALETHES.

POSTSCRIPT

Dear Sir,

11-

d;

WO

ave

neir

hin

gh,

the

and ace

and not

; at are.

the

emhis

coud

e it,

n or they

iver,

thou

roud

ilty;

make

ough

Peti-

and

gere-

BE pleas'd, when you write next, to give my most humble Respects to the Gentlemen, the Elaborate Compilers of the Letter to the Author of the Flying-Post (Num. 3442) dated Jan 12, and the most ingenious History and curious Queries at the End of it. I am the more amaz'd at that prodigious Performance; when I consider, that many of my Correspondents from Ireland, do assure me, that Not more than One bundred and Twenty clubb'd to the admirable Composition; nay, and some are very consident, that 19 of them were Aldermen, down right Aldermen. Good Sir, give my humble Respects as before; and let 'em know know, That it shall be the Study of my Life, to obtain the Honour of their Acquaintance; that I may have the Happiness of playing one Game of Questions and Commands with 'em before I die: For tis beyond all Dispute, That they are, at this Day, the greatest Masters in that refin'd Art, of any in the Polite World. Let them know, that it was in a great Measure, from the infinite Regard I had to them, (because I observ'd'em somewhat shagrin'd) that I was at the Expence of fo much Mirth and good Humour in my Aniwer to your Letter; to give them full Satisfaction in Relation to their learned Differtations upon the Interposition of the Clergy in the Affair of my L-d C-r, and their Charity to Mr. Moleiworth, and their own Acute Queries upon both.

But because they may perhaps be offended, if I should not pay a particular Regard to that E-laborate Composition, be pleased to let them know, That I have taken it into my most serious Consideration; that I have studied it Day and Night, since the first Moment it appeared in a fair Print in this Kingdom; and that besides the full Satisfaction given to the principal Points of it, in my Answer to you, I have likewise made the following Important Observations, upon the Historical Part of it, with such close and pertinent Answers to the Queries annexed, as you your self will own to be full, well digested, and Satisfactory.

OBSERVATIONS upon the Historical Part.
Observation I.

One Third of that Ingenious Narration, is realy Fact, bating a confiderable Chronological Error, one

on tu

co

Ch

ma

mel

thei

tis

were upon

of t

N

T

one Errour of the Press, and one or two small Hiatus in the M. S. all which may and must be thus corrected and supply'd, because otherwise every Child can tell that it is imperfect and false in many Places.)

For the C___ns of Ireland_read_the Leading Men of the C____ns of Ireland_ betwixt the Words Way, and Had, insert - no less than the Opposition of Truth, Honesty and a good Conscience. For a whole Week,---read--- almost Three whole Years; for inform themselves, read—invent—between the Words Publick, and the, infert, -many Instances of.

And thus the Truth of the Narration will be well consulted; and the Sense preserv'd entire, and then the Paragraph will stand thus -

The Leading Men of the C-ns of Ireland, with an inexpressible Courage and through the greatest Difficulties immaginable, which were thrown in their Way, no less than the Opposition of Truth, Honesty and a good Conscience, had been Labouring for almost Three whole Years, first to invent, and afterwards to expose to the Publick, many Instances of the male Administration of the L-d G of Ireland, &c

Observation II.

As to many evil Designs, and Practices that follow; 'tis certain, (as my Authors have it) that they were all (either publickly or privately) charged upon the Cb——r by the C——ns.

N. B. They were all charged, but not one Title of them proved.

Observa:

nay of ie: , at

ain

rt, W,

ite em

nce my tis-

itithe

ity ies

, if

 E_{-} W, P-IIC

ht, air

ull

it,

ade he

ent

elf ry.

rt.

aly or,

one

li

fr

ev

th

th

th ge te

te

te

di

-th

Observation. III.

Tis cause of great Speculation, why the C—ns did not expose to the World, long Lists of those poor and profligate Persons, who were made Sherists and Justices of the Peace, by the L—d Ch—r; especially, when both he. and his Friends, had the Assurance to Vaunt openly, That, they would compare those Lists, with any that had been made since the Revolution.

Observation IV.

'Tis no less amazing, why, they did not expose to the Publick, those Multitudes of Papists which he suffer'd to be Arm'd contrary to Law; unless pershaps they deem their Numbers too Formidable to be provoked; the Reports of this Matter are very various; some woud seem to insinuate that They were at least Fifty Thousand: And others who have seen the Lists are very consident, they were but Fifty: The Courtisus Reader is at his Choice to believe which he pleases.

Observation V.

Tis generally believ'd here, That the L___d Ch___r's encouraging of Converts, was in Pursuance of a deep Design he had form d within himself for many Years past; to destroy the Protestant Interest of Irelands by bringing over as many as he coud to the Establish'd Church: And that not enly indirect Desiance to an Alt, Entituled, An Act to prevent the farther Growth of Popery; but like-likewise, in Contradiction to the Heads of a Bill, brought in the last Session; To disqualify all Converts from Honours and Places of Trust, not excepting even his G— of Sh——) and that for the further Encouragement of such Persons as should for sake the Errours of the Church of Rome, in Pursuance of the said Act.

Observation VI.

Many Things, in the Third Paragraph of this ingenious History, are hudled together in so confus'd and perplex'd a Manner, as would incline the Courteous Reader to suspect in any Authors of less Integrity, that it was neither the Design nor the Interest of the Historians to give a true, clear, and distinct View of those Particulars, to the World; they tell us, that,

'In Opposition to all these Proceedings of the C—ns, then upon the Anvil, the ' House of L—ds thought it adviseable to f lay claim to their Character of a supreme ' Court of Judicature, took upon themseves to prejudge a Cause, which might, and ought, according to the Order of Parliamentary Accusations, to have come before them, and Address d Her Majesty in Vin-dication of my L—d C—r by coun' ter Examinations taken after an axtraordinary Manner ex parte, &c.

Now woud not any One that read that Paragraph, conclude, That the Lords Address in Favour of my L—d Ch——r, was in direct Opposition to the Proceedings of the C——ns.

C 2 then ofe to

ch he

per to be

-725

poor

and

-r;

the

comnade

were bave but

re to

ursumjelf stant

Act but like-

Aa

tit

fai

gi

na cit

on

str

A

ai

waj

fo

R

fin

n

d

then upon the Anvil; and, that, that Address was founded upon counter Examinations, taken after an Extraordinary Manner, ex parte, &c. (If those Words have any Meaning, 'tis certain this must be it:) And yet 'tis Notorious that this Address of the Lords, had no Relation either to those Examinations, or to the Proceedings of the House of C-ns, in Relation to the L-d Ch—r; for as much as they had not then enter'd upon those Proceedings; but referr'd entirely to some Aspersions thrown upon the L-d Ch-r by one Nuttal: which the L-ds enquiring into, and finding no Grounds for fuch calumny; did indeed prefume to tell Her Majesty as much: but as for those Enormous Discoveries of the L-d C-rs male Administration made after that, by the C-ns; 'tis certain the L—ds never fo much as touch'd upon 'em, till after the C——ns had gone into some Resolutions, against the L-d C--r, and Address'd Her Majesty upon those RE-SOLUTIONS; and then indeed they drew up a faithful Representation of these Facts that were charg'd against him : And if this be Prejudging, I cannot but observe in the next Place.

Observation VII.

That, Prejudging is taken (in that Place) in a very New and Special Acceptation of the Word, Observation VIII.

The other Two Parts of that most ingenious Narration, are partly Fact, and partly the Product of Fruitful Invention, founded upon that Favourite Adage dress Adage of the Eminent Compilers; calumniare fortaken titer et aliquid adhærebit. But,

, &c.

rtain that ither

gs of

L--d

then

d en__d

s enh ca-

ijesty

coveraticerapon ome --r, REup a were ging,

in a

Tart of rite lage

Observation IX.

"Tis the general Opinion that the Proverb has fail'd in this Instance; and that the well imagin'd Calumny of our Author, has by an unfortunate Kind of an Antipæristatis, by Reason of the circumambient Truth, reflected, and encreas'd upon themselves. But many that allow the former, are strongly inclin'd to think the latter impossible.

35 Answers, to the 44 Queries - vide Fiying-Post. Num. 3442.

'ist. to 4 Q's. I answer directly—ay.
2d. to 1———av. av.
2d to 4 obliquely yes
2 4th. to 1.——av, yes.
Anf. 2 the 5th. to 1, positively, ———————————————————————————————————— J mon certains
7th. to 1, Wifely. — because *-
* N. B. why 8th. to 2, Sternly - why * and because 9th to 9, peremptorily — no.
are written 10. to 2, fiercely - no, no.
with a Dash 11. to 1, disdainfully not at all.
after them 12. to 3, partitively ay, no.
for Reasons 13. to 1, which the Reader will 14. to 10. \text{ the most shrewd and ingenious of the whole Sett, find, if he gravely \text{humph.} Reader will 14. to 10. S genious of the whole Sett, find, if he gravely ——— humph.
weighs 'em 15. to 1, —————————perhaps.
duly.
Tot 44.

I need not tell the curious Reader which Anfwers are design'd for which Queries; he will easily observe by the first cast of his Eye, the great Pertinancy and close Relation betwixt every Query, and it's correspondent Answer, particularly betwixt the Archest Q in the whole, and the ingenious Perhaps. Doubtless he will also wisely consider the prosound Mystery couch'd under the 9th Answer to the 9 Queries referred to: With many other Depths (I may say it without Vanity) of prosound Speculation, and uncommon Knowledge.

Dear Sir, 'tis hop'd you'l be so kind as to take particular Notice to your Friends of the Letter-Writer's unparalell'd Modesty, Good Manners, and great Deference to their Superior Judgment; in presuming to Answer but One of their Queries, dischainfully, and One wisely.

'Tis hop'd you will likewise observe to 'em, That, *Letters, *Remarks, *Observations, and *Examinations, are the Expressions now in mode to signify full and compleat Answers, from such Masterly Hands as none ever dar'd venture to Reply to before.

Sir, Your most Humble,

most devoted and most obliged Servant.

PHILALETHES:

* Vido

n

n

fe

g

tr

to a

e

20 0 ti

P

n

go

* Vide Englishman, Vol--- Num --- vide Remarks upon a certain Discourse, &c. by an Illustrious unknown M. F. vide Who-t-ghan's Examinations, &c. just publish'd. vide L---m--rt's Obfervat. Nondum editas--

ADVERTISEMENT.

Ow in the Press, to be published when the first Edition of this Renown'd Letter and Postscript, are entirely disposed of, and not before, a curious Historico-philological Treatise of the Origin and Excellent Use of Enigma's, deriv'd down from their first Rise (much higher than Oedipus) to the Oaks of Dodona, from thence, to the Renoun'd SPHYNX; from Her to Her celebrated Majesty of SHEBA, and thence transmitted throa long Series of EASTERN-BARDS; and at Length recover'd in Europe among the other learned and useful Discoveries of the GOTHS and VANDALS; from which Remarkable ÆRA, you will find a more Special and Minute Relation, of all their wonderful Adventures and Effects for the Space of some Hundreds of Years, down to their present lamentable (and never to be enough deplor'd) Decay and Corruption into Queries. To which is added, A Large Appendix concerning the various Methods of Proof, most esteem'd in all Ages since the Invention of Logick; containing all the most subtle and essential Distinctions, between

Argument at ion

By Catechism, or putting a Queftion. --- By Petition, commonly call'd, Petitio Principii; or begging the Question; and by Syllogism; or clear Proof.

FINIS.

anfealigreat Quelarly e in-

With Vani-

ifely

the Good prior e of

and node fuch

i. IES:

o. 1

10 AND THE SHEET WITH THE PARTY OF A Property of the second of th TAINE CALL OF THE THE STATE OF the test and a wave Special and Alaste Rose and a few to the first than the to the to in The transfer of the light of the court of the gretont longitudes (en and to be perfect Touth From and Court, or to 1 Louis but his added, and Lar eight want were reing suring Property Property of the State of the fee feet the later from at I winds to contain received the chillest principally a steply tom end Frenchish, or print to the first piller By Pelities, english I clld Letter in the of break the Que parass The wind gard d